

NEW APPLICATIONS FOR RENAULT KADJAR 2015+

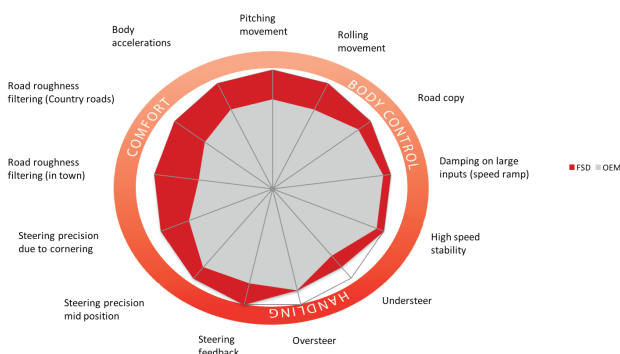

The family cross-over from Renault, the Kadjar, is received in the market as a direct competitor of the Nissan Qashqai. The Renault Kadjar's looks are in line with its design philosophy, even though it shares the same platform with the Qashqai.

During the test-drives we found out that the front and rear of car has a pretty good balance. The car steers well, although during cornering the steering feedback is a bit vague and there's quite a bit of body roll. When pushing the car to its limits, the ESP tends to intervene quite early which could annoy the sporty drivers. Plus it doesn't give the expected confidence at higher corner speeds. The overall comfort of the car is moderate, but the car tends to copy the road a bit too much. With the KONI FSD shocks the steering feedback is a little more direct. The car cuts the corners as it should and because of the better grip levels the ESP intervenes at a different level. The overall comfort level has improved and the body roll has flattened out.
